

Restaurants in 18 states
no longer have a secondhand smoking section.

Thirty-two more to go.

American Cancer Society volunteers are taking action to save people from smoking-related illnesses. We're proud to announce that 18 states and hundreds of communities across the nation have now enacted smoke-free laws for restaurants. And smoke-free campaigns are also under way throughout the rest of the country. | Tobacco use will be responsible for 440,000 premature deaths related to smoking and 38,000 deaths as a result of secondhand smoke this year. | Every one of those deaths could be prevented. | Smoke-free laws save lives and the American Cancer Society is working with local communities nationwide to do just that. One state at a time.
